A. H. Van Buren Has Great Role in Which to Display Real Talent.

Admirers of the Columbia Players' leading man, A. H. Van Buren, will be delighted the coming week when they will see him at the Columbia Theater in the best role in which he has appeared this season.

It is that of Jim Radburn, the stanch and ragged sheriff of Pike county, in Nat. C. Goodwin's most successful drama, "In Mizzoura." The play is one of the series of geographical offerings from the pen of that foremost of American dramatists, Augustus Thomas, and by many is regarded. tus Thomas, and by many is regarded as equal to, if not better than, its com-panion, "Alabama."

as equal to, if not better than, its companion, "Alabama."

Mr. Goodwin found it the vehicle that raised him to the more pretentious drama in which he subsequently shone, its four acts being laden with dramatic situations and closely drawn characterizations that have added to the fame of many actors and actresses. That these opportunities will be made the most of by the Columbia Players is a foregone conclusion, and a series of delightful character studies may be anticipated.

A play of today, by Marion Fairfax, originally produced by Henry B. Harris, at the Harris Theater, New York, where it ran for six months, and with Tully Marshall on tour, with overwhelming success, is Poli's attraction for next week—"The Talker. The story is vital and gripping, and contains a world of bright lines and evidence of a woman's intuition in the cleverly conceived in's intuition in the cleverly conceive an's intuition in the cleverly conceived by-play.

The heroine of "The Taiker" is a woman filled with ideas of platonic friendship with man, and the right to live one's life as one sees fit. Although she works no real harm to herself, her husband's young sister listens, and taking her theory to heart, elopes with a wealthy man, who in the end, it develops, is married.

The working out of this situation, the regeneration of "The Taiker" and the rehabilitation of the heme, occupies the last act, and provides a strong sympathy for the husband, whose life is devoted to the maintenance of his house, the care of his wife and the strict observance of the tthics that should guide a good citizen.

It holds the mirror of nature up to such women as look upon marriage as only a means to provide ease and comfort, without giving to their husbands the comfort, sympathy, love, and companionship that marriage ought to bring.

"The Seven Diving Girls," who made such a sensation earlier in the season at the Cosmos Theater in "The Water Nymphs' Carnival," will return next week in their aquatic novelty, as the headline offering. Supplementing them will be five acts of vaudeville. Thursday night, the management announces, there will be a diving contest for boys, and Friday night one for girls, both under careful supervision. A handsome silver loving cup will be offered as a prize in each contest, which will be held in the mammoth diving tank used held in the mammoth diving tank used by the Water Nymphs, and experi ludges will pass upon the merits of the contestants. As usual there will be series of motion picture comedies and the Pathe Weekly Review of the world's big events.

South. Pole is rapidly drawing to a close; but two performances each day during the current week remain of the highly successful five weeks here. No entertainment of its kind, or of any class, has ever before been known to play for a stay of such length of time, which proves the popularity of this thrilling story of adventure.

Hundreds have been in attendance from two to four times, always returning with friends, of whom their enthusiasm has taken possession.
